Cause for Tremendous Liquidation Still Unaccounted for-Copper, Sugar, and Steel Still Active.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.-The Stock Market continued extremely unsettled in the early dealings this morning, declines of from 1 to 2 points appearing all along the line.

The dealings were in exceedingly large volume and well distributed throughout the market. It seems to have been the common expectation that this morning's newspapers might have contained some clear explanation of the tremendous liquidation which set in in the final dealings of yesterday, but as a matter of fact there was no news of any importance bearing pon the general market or particualr stecks.

Conjecture as to the quarters from which the present liquidation was forthcoming was, of course, general, but little light was thrown upon the facts there either.

The London market for American stocks was quoted about one-half below the operators here for foreign account when business opened were conducted on both sides of the market.

Active features of the early dealings were Amalgamated Copper, Sugar, the United States Steel stocks, and in the railway list St. Paul, the Pacific shares and Atchison. The local traction shares were weak in sympathy with the general market, Manhattan opening down

"You well know, gentlemen of the jury, that a man was sent to Devil's Island for five years because of errors by handwriting experts in—"
"I have already called your attention to the fact," broke in the recorder, sharply, "that that case has nothing to do with this. It is not in evidence."

During the trial Mr Weeks had sought to question one of the experts as to the letters and bordereau in the Dreyfus case, but had been cut short by the court. Now he said:
"It is a matter of common notoriety your bears."

riety, your honor.' I care nothing about that, said

"I understand your honor ex-pressed an opinion."

"You don't know what you are talking about," said the recorder, with some evidence of anger. "That is the whole matter. You don't know what you are talking about. We know nothing of that case here." On February 10, 1900, when the jury returned its verdict of guilty, the recorder's summing up was as stern, as uncompromising as had been his attiparity with New York's final prices, and tude throughout the trial. His summing up was a remarkable one in a trial where the evidence had been so diffuse, so disordered, so contradictory, so frequently irrelevant.

The object of a person meditating a crime is to prepare the crime and con trive a mode of escape; therefore, the law would be powerless if exclusive reliance were to be placed in the testimony of eyewitnesses. The law must look for the footprints, the dropped stitches, which are the fingerposts of the crime. All these must be inconsistent with the innocence of the accused and entirely consistent with the guilt.

Ex-Governor Black, in his masterly guilty. Roland Molineux had justified names of the experts, confined himself to the plain story of the case, demonstrated its applicability to others than the prisoner at the bar. His simple method of treatment had its effect—the acquittal of Roland Molineux.

And the sifting of all the evidence that the previously took thirteen weeks to hear, with all the accretions of thirty-two months of lapsed time, with all the evidence the defense had urged, took a day less than four weeks to adjudicate upon.

The many degrees of difference between the first trial and the second, the contrasting personalities of the actors in the first drama and the second, were demonstrated in a single scene of that the case. In the second trial Justice Lambert needed but one hour and fifty-five minutes in which to place the essentials of the evidence before the twelve last, great day, when Mr. Osborne was addressing the court.

Barnet and Molineux had rooms near each other in the same club, said the prosecutor; both were pay-ing attention to the same young lady, and Molineux married her soon

Mr. Black broke in: "If the court pleases, I object to this reference to the Barnet case." Judge Lambert said: "The objection is sustained. "I beg your pardon, your honor," said the prosecutor, "I have spoken of nothing but what has come out in this testimony."

"No," replied Justice Lambert,
